

2022 Industry Impact Award Application

Program Overview

For 26 years, The Builders Exchange of Central Ohio has recognized members for proactive safety efforts and exceptional results through the annual BX Safety Awards Program.

Two awards were launched in 1995 – The Achievement Award (based on jobsite performance and statistical data) and the Innovation Award (based on innovative ideas.) A company may receive one or both awards.

In 2004, the BX created the Meg DeWerth Industry Impact Award to recognize a person, company or program that has significantly improved the safety and health of employees in the central Ohio construction industry. This award is not given every year.

What is The Industry Impact Award?

This award was named in honor of Meg DeWerth, the founding Builders Exchange staff director of the BX Safety Program, which has had a significant impact on the central Ohio construction industry. This award is designed to recognize a person or company who has made a significant contribution to safety in the local construction industry.

Who Are the Previous Winners?

- › In 2021, Mary Logan So (George J. Igel & Co.) was recognized for her work in health, education and safety for the past 18 years at both the BX and Igel.
- › In 2016, George Gillespie (Ohio Utilities Protection Service) was named a recipient for his undeniable advocacy and dedication to improving the safety and health of employees in central Ohio.
- › In 2014, Bob Brockmeyer received the award for his diverse, decades-long contributions to improving the safety and health of employees in central Ohio.
- › In 2007, Dianne Grote Adams (Safex, Inc.) was recognized for her passion for safety as demonstrated by her BX involvement. Her safety company provides classroom instruction, and employees serve as Safety Awards judges and participate in the Safety Advisory Council.
